A private went to his sergeant to find out what he should do about a cut on his finger. Sarge told him to go to the dispensary.

The private went to a door marked "Dispensary." He walked in and found himself in an empty room with two doors at the far end, one marked "Sickness" and the other "Injuries."

He figured he was injured, so he opened that door, only to find himself in another empty room with two doors. These were marked "Head/Body" and "Limbs/Extremities."

He decided a cut finger would come under the latter category so he went through that door. Again he found himself in an empty room with two doors. This time one was marked "Major" and the other "Minor."

He figured his was only a minor injury, so he walked though that door, only to find himself outdoors.

Later the sergeant asked him if he got his finger fixed. "No," he said, "but, boy, is that place organized!"
