The Irish Milkman

There was once an Irish milkman, whose name was Mick McGill.

Who came across a Bible, which showed to him God's Will.

He read and read and read again; until the Light he saw
Then bade farewell to pope and priest and all the Romish law!
But the parish priest soon heard of this, and down to Mick he sped.

"I hear you read the Bible, Sir," is what his priest then said.

*"And sure 'tis true now, " Mick replied, "I'll tell the truth to thee.
I found the precious Lamb of God. His Blood hath made me free!"*

The priest with angry voice replied: "Oh! Thou presumptuous fool.

Thou hast a heretic become of hated Baptist school.
Give me that Book. Read it no more. No ignorant man can know.

Not even we who are the priests can tell where we will go!"

*"But surely you must reason give why I give up this Book;
And why on such a holy page I never more must look.
For as I read the Book alone, the Book itself reads me
And in its pages comfort find when I in trouble be."*

The priest replied, "The book itself has placed it on record,
Like as young babes we should desire the sincere milk of the Word;
And you, an ignorant man, yea! Babe on the true Church should rely

And take the milk she offers you and learn to grow thereby."

*"Be easy now then," Mick replied, as high he raised his brow,
"I once took ill and a neighbor got to watch and milk my cow.
But what do you think he did? As sure as the Queen wears silk
If he didn't steal half the sincere and water down my milk.
From that, I learned a lesson, and as the Book is upon my shelf
I'll take and read it daily, and I'll get the Word myself.*

*Lest you do as my neighbor did, and the Word should water down
And keep the cream all to yourself, and never made a sound!"*

"You're not so ignorant after all," the priest replied.

"But listen to my last advice," as Mick he fully eyed.

"Just keep the Book. Read it yourself, but let none living know;
Lest they might do as you have done and from our Church should go."

*"Ah no! Of course not," Mick replied, "The same would selfish be.
I found the way of Truth and Life and I must let it go free.
I through this book, Salvation found, and no matter when or where
I to my neighbors all around the Truth of God declare!"*
