Spurgeon on Psalms

God permitted David to go through many experiences, not so much for himself as for the good of succeeding generations.

Whenever we look into David's psalms, we may somewhere or other see ourselves. I never get into a corner but I find David in that corner. I think I was never so low that I could not find that David was lower, and I never climbed so high that I could not find that David was up above me, ready to sing his song upon his stringed instruments, even as I could sing mine.

"But his delight is in the law of the LORD; and in his law doth he meditate day and night."

- Psalm 1:2 -

The "happy" person spends his time meditating on God's Word. Reading reaps the wheat; meditation threshes it, grinds it, and makes it into bread. Reading is like the ox feeding; meditation is it digesting when chewing the cud. It is not only reading that does us good but the soul inwardly feeding on it and digesting it.
